

Cutting education won't help balance the state budget

July 18, 2009

The deep cuts to education are not a way to solve the state's budget deficit. Those cuts will just be passed along to property owners as an increase in school taxes.

We in East Penn have already seen a large increase in our school taxes. These state cuts to educational programs will also result in an increase in class sizes, fewer programs for needy children and without a doubt, a drop in PSSA scores. Please let the governor and your state representative know that they need to find another way to balance the budget.

Maybe a pay reduction by state legislators?
